The Public Works report says the wastewater plant is “operational,” but the details tell a different story. A primary motor failed, two pumps are still on order, a mixer isn’t working, a sump pump failed, and SCADA controls aren’t finished. Then the report states, “We lack staff to complete the repairs needed,” and “We lack the staff to operate the system properly and continuously.” A plant that can’t be repaired or staffed isn’t operational in any meaningful sense. Bellevue needs clear answers: who will run it, who will maintain it, and what’s required for continuous, safe operation. These aren’t details to figure out after startup.
